

I'm not a robot

THEIR PUBLISHED HEARD YOU PAINT HOUSES New York Times Best Seller Now a major motion picture directed by Robert De Niro, Al Pacino, Joe Pesci, Anna Paquin, and Academy Award winner Steven Zwart. The Irishman "gives new meaning to the term 'guilty pleasure.'" (Byron Burrough, author of Public Enemies, in the New York Times Book Review) "Told with such economy and clarity as to make the Sopranos suddenly seem overwrought and theatrical." (New York Daily News) A terrific read. (Kansas City Star) The Irishman is an epic saga of organized crime in post-war America told through the eyes of World War II veteran Frank Sheeran, a hustler and hitman who worked for legendary crime boss Russell Bufalino alongside some of the most notorious figures of the 20th century. Sparring, drinking, Sheeran's story chronicles one of the greatest unsolved mysteries in American history, the assassination of John F. Kennedy. Sheeran confessed to Charles Brandt that he handled more than 25 hits for the mob, and Brandt turned Sheeran's story into a huge-worthy crime classic. Page 2 of 1996-2014, Amazon.com, Inc. or its affiliates. "Heard You Paint Houses" is one of the best accounts of the disappearance of Jimmy Hoffa, former Teamsters union boss and one of the most powerful men in America. One of Sheeran's virtues was his gift as a storyteller; one of his flaws was his tendency to embellish. He did it in prose reminiscent of the best gangster films. Jimmy Hoffa got shot twice at decent range, not too close or the paint splatters back at you in the back of the head, behind his right ear," said Sheeran, and then, this magnificently iconic line: "My friend didn't suffer." Associated Press Brandt's book gives new meaning to the term "guilty pleasure." Sheeran's account of Hoffa's killing certainly appears credible. — New York Times Book Review Sheeran's confession that he killed Hoffa in the manner of a hitman, working for legend crime boss Russell Bufalino, eventually becoming one of only two non-Italians on the FBI's famous La Cosa Nostra list. He was also a truck driver who was made boss of the Teamsters local in Wilmington, Delaware, by his god friend Jimmy Hoffa. When Hoffa disappeared in 1975, Sheeran became a leading suspect, and every serious study of the Hoffa disappearance alleges that Sheeran was there for the first time the Irishman told all a lifetime of exploits (including hand-delivering bags of cash to Nixon's attorney general John Mitchell) and manipulation (supporting Joe Biden's election to the Senate with a Teamster action for the book that would become his deathbed confession). He died on December 14, 2003. Sheeran also provides shocking new information on notorious mob hit Joseph Crayzo July Galloway away as he celebrated his forty-third birthday in New York's Little Italy. Salvatore Salvo Bugingo long suspected of being a player in the plot to kill Hoffa. And offers new insights to the crushing of Robert Kennedy and the death of John F. Kennedy. This historical account is based on information from Frank Sheeran by Charles Brandt, who researched, checked, checked, and illuminated what Sheeran told him and turned it all into a gripping narrative that is sure to become an instant true crime classic. "I heard you paint houses" are the first words Jimmy Hoffa ever spoke to Frank Sheeran. Eventually he found a position to such prominence that in a RICO suit the U.S. Attorney Rudy Giuliani would name him as one of only two non-Italians on a list of 26 top mob figures. When Bufalino ordered Sheeran to kill Hoffa, he did the deed, knowing that if he had refused he would have been killed himself. Sheeran's important and fascinating story includes new information on Robert Kennedy, and provides rare insight to a chapter in American history. Charles Brandt has written a page-turner that is as gripping as any true crime novel. The Irishman is a masterpiece of storytelling. Sheeran's confession that he killed Hoffa in the manner of a hitman, working for legend crime boss Russell Bufalino, eventually becoming one of only two non-Italians on the FBI's famous La Cosa Nostra list. He was also a truck driver who was made boss of the Teamsters local in Wilmington, Delaware, by his god friend Jimmy Hoffa. When Hoffa disappeared in 1975, Sheeran became a leading suspect, and every serious study of the Hoffa disappearance alleges that Sheeran was there for the first time the Irishman told all a lifetime of exploits (including hand-delivering bags of cash to Nixon's attorney general John Mitchell) and manipulation (supporting Joe Biden's election to the Senate with a Teamster action for the book that would become his deathbed confession). He died on December 14, 2003. Sheeran also provides shocking new information on notorious mob hit Joseph Crayzo July Galloway away as he celebrated his forty-third birthday in New York's Little Italy. Salvatore Salvo Bugingo long suspected of being a player in the plot to kill Hoffa. And offers new insights to the crushing of Robert Kennedy and the death of John F. Kennedy. This historical account is based on information from Frank Sheeran by Charles Brandt, who researched, checked, checked, and illuminated what Sheeran told him and turned it all into a gripping narrative that is sure to become an instant true crime classic. "I heard you paint houses" are the first words Jimmy Hoffa ever spoke to Frank Sheeran. Eventually he found a position to such prominence that in a RICO suit the U.S. Attorney Rudy Giuliani would name him as one of only two non-Italians on a list of 26 top mob figures. When Bufalino ordered Sheeran to kill Hoffa, he did the deed, knowing that if he had refused he would have been killed himself. Sheeran's important and fascinating story includes new information on Robert Kennedy, and provides rare insight to a chapter in American history. Charles Brandt has written a page-turner that is as gripping as any true crime novel. The Irishman is a masterpiece of storytelling. Sheeran's confession that he killed Hoffa in the manner of a hitman, working for legend crime boss Russell Bufalino, eventually becoming one of only two non-Italians on the FBI's famous La Cosa Nostra list. He was also a truck driver who was made boss of the Teamsters local in Wilmington, Delaware, by his god friend Jimmy Hoffa. When Hoffa disappeared in 1975, Sheeran became a leading suspect, and every serious study of the Hoffa disappearance alleges that Sheeran was there for the first time the Irishman told all a lifetime of exploits (including hand-delivering bags of cash to Nixon's attorney general John Mitchell) and manipulation (supporting Joe Biden's election to the Senate with a Teamster action for the book that would become his deathbed confession). He died on December 14, 2003. Sheeran also provides shocking new information on notorious mob hit Joseph Crayzo July Galloway away as he celebrated his forty-third birthday in New York's Little Italy. Salvatore Salvo Bugingo long suspected of being a player in the plot to kill Hoffa. And offers new insights to the crushing of Robert Kennedy and the death of John F. Kennedy. This historical account is based on information from Frank Sheeran by Charles Brandt, who researched, checked, checked, and illuminated what Sheeran told him and turned it all into a gripping narrative that is sure to become an instant true crime classic. "I heard you paint houses" are the first words Jimmy Hoffa ever spoke to Frank Sheeran. Eventually he found a position to such prominence that in a RICO suit the U.S. Attorney Rudy Giuliani would name him as one of only two non-Italians on a list of 26 top mob figures. When Bufalino ordered Sheeran to kill Hoffa, he did the deed, knowing that if he had refused he would have been killed himself. Sheeran's important and fascinating story includes new information on Robert Kennedy, and provides rare insight to a chapter in American history. Charles Brandt has written a page-turner that is as gripping as any true crime novel. The Irishman is a masterpiece of storytelling. Sheeran's confession that he killed Hoffa in the manner of a hitman, working for legend crime boss Russell Bufalino, eventually becoming one of only two non-Italians on the FBI's famous La Cosa Nostra list. He was also a truck driver who was made boss of the Teamsters local in Wilmington, Delaware, by his god friend Jimmy Hoffa. When Hoffa disappeared in 1975, Sheeran became a leading suspect, and every serious study of the Hoffa disappearance alleges that Sheeran was there for the first time the Irishman told all a lifetime of exploits (including hand-delivering bags of cash to Nixon's attorney general John Mitchell) and manipulation (supporting Joe Biden's election to the Senate with a Teamster action for the book that would become his deathbed confession). He died on December 14, 2003. Sheeran also provides shocking new information on notorious mob hit Joseph Crayzo July Galloway away as he celebrated his forty-third birthday in New York's Little Italy. Salvatore Salvo Bugingo long suspected of being a player in the plot to kill Hoffa. And offers new insights to the crushing of Robert Kennedy and the death of John F. Kennedy. This historical account is based on information from Frank Sheeran by Charles Brandt, who researched, checked, checked, and illuminated what Sheeran told him and turned it all into a gripping narrative that is sure to become an instant true crime classic. "I heard you paint houses" are the first words Jimmy Hoffa ever spoke to Frank Sheeran. Eventually he found a position to such prominence that in a RICO suit the U.S. Attorney Rudy Giuliani would name him as one of only two non-Italians on a list of 26 top mob figures. When Bufalino ordered Sheeran to kill Hoffa, he did the deed, knowing that if he had refused he would have been killed himself. Sheeran's important and fascinating story includes new information on Robert Kennedy, and provides rare insight to a chapter in American history. Charles Brandt has written a page-turner that is as gripping as any true crime novel. The Irishman is a masterpiece of storytelling. Sheeran's confession that he killed Hoffa in the manner of a hitman, working for legend crime boss Russell Bufalino, eventually becoming one of only two non-Italians on the FBI's famous La Cosa Nostra list. He was also a truck driver who was made boss of the Teamsters local in Wilmington, Delaware, by his god friend Jimmy Hoffa. When Hoffa disappeared in 1975, Sheeran became a leading suspect, and every serious study of the Hoffa disappearance alleges that Sheeran was there for the first time the Irishman told all a lifetime of exploits (including hand-delivering bags of cash to Nixon's attorney general John Mitchell) and manipulation (supporting Joe Biden's election to the Senate with a Teamster action for the book that would become his deathbed confession). He died on December 14, 2003. Sheeran also provides shocking new information on notorious mob hit Joseph Crayzo July Galloway away as he celebrated his forty-third birthday in New York's Little Italy. Salvatore Salvo Bugingo long suspected of being a player in the plot to kill Hoffa. And offers new insights to the crushing of Robert Kennedy and the death of John F. Kennedy. This historical account is based on information from Frank Sheeran by Charles Brandt, who researched, checked, checked, and illuminated what Sheeran told him and turned it all into a gripping narrative that is sure to become an instant true crime classic. "I heard you paint houses" are the first words Jimmy Hoffa ever spoke to Frank Sheeran. Eventually he found a position to such prominence that in a RICO suit the U.S. Attorney Rudy Giuliani would name him as one of only two non-Italians on a list of 26 top mob figures. When Bufalino ordered Sheeran to kill Hoffa, he did the deed, knowing that if he had refused he would have been killed himself. Sheeran's important and fascinating story includes new information on Robert Kennedy, and provides rare insight to a chapter in American history. Charles Brandt has written a page-turner that is as gripping as any true crime novel. The Irishman is a masterpiece of storytelling. Sheeran's confession that he killed Hoffa in the manner of a hitman, working for legend crime boss Russell Bufalino, eventually becoming one of only two non-Italians on the FBI's famous La Cosa Nostra list. He was also a truck driver who was made boss of the Teamsters local in Wilmington, Delaware, by his god friend Jimmy Hoffa. When Hoffa disappeared in 1975, Sheeran became a leading suspect, and every serious study of the Hoffa disappearance alleges that Sheeran was there for the first time the Irishman told all a lifetime of exploits (including hand-delivering bags of cash to Nixon's attorney general John Mitchell) and manipulation (supporting Joe Biden's election to the Senate with a Teamster action for the book that would become his deathbed confession). He died on December 14, 2003. Sheeran also provides shocking new information on notorious mob hit Joseph Crayzo July Galloway away as he celebrated his forty-third birthday in New York's Little Italy. Salvatore Salvo Bugingo long suspected of being a player in the plot to kill Hoffa. And offers new insights to the crushing of Robert Kennedy and the death of John F. Kennedy. This historical account is based on information from Frank Sheeran by Charles Brandt, who researched, checked, checked, and illuminated what Sheeran told him and turned it all into a gripping narrative that is sure to become an instant true crime classic. "I heard you paint houses" are the first words Jimmy Hoffa ever spoke to Frank Sheeran. Eventually he found a position to such prominence that in a RICO suit the U.S. Attorney Rudy Giuliani would name him as one of only two non-Italians on a list of 26 top mob figures. When Bufalino ordered Sheeran to kill Hoffa, he did the deed, knowing that if he had refused he would have been killed himself. Sheeran's important and fascinating story includes new information on Robert Kennedy, and provides rare insight to a chapter in American history. Charles Brandt has written a page-turner that is as gripping as any true crime novel. The Irishman is a masterpiece of storytelling. Sheeran's confession that he killed Hoffa in the manner of a hitman, working for legend crime boss Russell Bufalino, eventually becoming one of only two non-Italians on the FBI's famous La Cosa Nostra list. He was also a truck driver who was made boss of the Teamsters local in Wilmington, Delaware, by his god friend Jimmy Hoffa. When Hoffa disappeared in 1975, Sheeran became a leading suspect, and every serious study of the Hoffa disappearance alleges that Sheeran was there for the first time the Irishman told all a lifetime of exploits (including hand-delivering bags of cash to Nixon's attorney general John Mitchell) and manipulation (supporting Joe Biden's election to the Senate with a Teamster action for the book that would become his deathbed confession). He died on December 14, 2003. Sheeran also provides shocking new information on notorious mob hit Joseph Crayzo July Galloway away as he celebrated his forty-third birthday in New York's Little Italy. Salvatore Salvo Bugingo long suspected of being a player in the plot to kill Hoffa. And offers new insights to the crushing of Robert Kennedy and the death of John F. Kennedy. This historical account is based on information from Frank Sheeran by Charles Brandt, who researched, checked, checked, and illuminated what Sheeran told him and turned it all into a gripping narrative that is sure to become an instant true crime classic. "I heard you paint houses" are the first words Jimmy Hoffa ever spoke to Frank Sheeran. Eventually he found a position to such prominence that in a RICO suit the U.S. Attorney Rudy Giuliani would name him as one of only two non-Italians on a list of 26 top mob figures. When Bufalino ordered Sheeran to kill Hoffa, he did the deed, knowing that if he had refused he would have been killed himself. Sheeran's important and fascinating story includes new information on Robert Kennedy, and provides rare insight to a chapter in American history. Charles Brandt has written a page-turner that is as gripping as any true crime novel. The Irishman is a masterpiece of storytelling. Sheeran's confession that he killed Hoffa in the manner of a hitman, working for legend crime boss Russell Bufalino, eventually becoming one of only two non-Italians on the FBI's famous La Cosa Nostra list. He was also a truck driver who was made boss of the Teamsters local in Wilmington, Delaware, by his god friend Jimmy Hoffa. When Hoffa disappeared in 1975, Sheeran became a leading suspect, and every serious study of the Hoffa disappearance alleges that Sheeran was there for the first time the Irishman told all a lifetime of exploits (including hand-delivering bags of cash to Nixon's attorney general John Mitchell) and manipulation (supporting Joe Biden's election to the Senate with a Teamster action for the book that would become his deathbed confession). He died on December 14, 2003. Sheeran also provides shocking new information on notorious mob hit Joseph Crayzo July Galloway away as he celebrated his forty-third birthday in New York's Little Italy. Salvatore Salvo Bugingo long suspected of being a player in the plot to kill Hoffa. And offers new insights to the crushing of Robert Kennedy and the death of John F. Kennedy. This historical account is based on information from Frank Sheeran by Charles Brandt, who researched, checked, checked, and illuminated what Sheeran told him and turned it all into a gripping narrative that is sure to become an instant true crime classic. "I heard you paint houses" are the first words Jimmy Hoffa ever spoke to Frank Sheeran. Eventually he found a position to such prominence that in a RICO suit the U.S. Attorney Rudy Giuliani would name him as one of only two non-Italians on a list of 26 top mob figures. When Bufalino ordered Sheeran to kill Hoffa, he did the deed, knowing that if he had refused he would have been killed himself. Sheeran's important and fascinating story includes new information on Robert Kennedy, and provides rare insight to a chapter in American history. Charles Brandt has written a page-turner that is as gripping as any true crime novel. The Irishman is a masterpiece of storytelling. Sheeran's confession that he killed Hoffa in the manner of a hitman, working for legend crime boss Russell Bufalino, eventually becoming one of only two non-Italians on the FBI's famous La Cosa Nostra list. He was also a truck driver who was made boss of the Teamsters local in Wilmington, Delaware