among rich folks um they don't care much about racism at all so you wont encounter it. To answer you question and more about 2: Can't speak 100% for Bronxville, but I used to take the Metro and imo more or less Scarsdale Crestwood Hartsdale all got the same vibes. Only real difference are the number of Jews, more on that later. As to why This entire affluent area lacks diversity its called red-lining. Back in the 50s 60s there was a concentrated effort to reject all minorities or force em into the very few condos that exist. Expats (Japanese) got the condos Jews moved to Scarsdale. If you look at some of the older Condominium Complexes around the area, the architectural design has a very Eastern aesthetic. Anyway, housing permits for new multi-family buildings get rejected by community and the Westchester County Govt. took kickbacks lying on the census about diversity. They were suppose to construct a crap ton of units. Instead of refunding the money, federal govt. ordered Westchester to build the new multi-family complexes on the outskirts of towns or undesirable locations. 80/20 buildings essentially would've been the final result realistically. To address the Affordable Housing/ Fair Housing Act ongoing crisis in White Plains and well Westchester (has the largest homeless population outside of NYC), a lawsuit was sent to the courts in 2009 and they have been back in forth ever since derailing until president elected Trump gutted the bill in 2016 ruling that housing discrimination does not occur in Westchester County lol OK. So that's the very short history of how housing works over here and it explains the lack of diversity. It's by design and intentional. Remove the legalese and it boils down to locals don't want minorities in their backyard. Many Real Estate Developers Politicians want news home to be built in these communities, but locals spew the typical rhetoric new home new condos new apartment buildings means the appraisal on my house goes down. Partly true mostly false, but I digress. They will tolerate a few, but not a wave. Lastly, very much like Scarsdale, a lot of the homes in Bronxville are inherited and passed down in the family like we are talking decades like Scarsdale "Old Money". Despite this, many people that live up here are very superficial keep and wont state this in the open meaning your kid will rarely run into racism. You might get 1 or 2 incidents but by large most are civilized friendly and tbh just don't *ing care? Again Rich white folks don't care what you look like. They only care about what you can do for them and um they will treat you as an equal respect. Keep in mind a lot of people that live up here are Executives, Managing Directors, CFO's, CIO's etc. The higher you climb the economic ladder, less racism there is period. Page 2 04-01-2021, 10:44 AM 978 posts, read 1,539,604 times Reputation: 1684 Quote: Originally Posted by sbainsworth We're a family of 3 looking to move from the city to Westchester. Bronxville is a beautiful town that checks all of the above boxes, but its lack of diversity and history of overt racism and exclusionary practices are well known. I grew up in a predominantly white town and never had problems making friends, and still have plenty of white friends to date, so the fact that most Bronxville's lack of diversity the result of racial/ethnic/religious minorities self-selecting to live elsewhere because they have other options like Scarsdale where they can have a greater sense of community? Or is it because the residents are actively exclusionary and unwelcoming toward people who don't come from a white Christian background? If the latter, I'm sure they're polished enough to be polite to my face, at least when sober, but I couldn't deal with people covertly excluding me or subtly treating me differently -- or worse, doing it to my child -- because we're not white. Is it even worth considering living in Bronxville, or should we just shift our search to Scarsdale where we wouldn't have the same concerns about feeling unwelcome? In recent years, I think it is self-selecting, as you have suggested. Nowadays, it is extremely easy for anyone to find out exactly the make-up of a town/school district. Anyone looking at Bronxville has the financial means to live almost anywhere, and I think certain racial minorities/jewish families will simply go to other areas. 04-03-2021,

Vernon and how someone was comparing Fleetwood to Bronxville. I am Jewish and in my 50s and grew up in Mt. Vernon. When I was a kid, basically the idea was Bronxville was where "old money" (i.e. WASPs) lived and Scarsdale was where "new money" (at the time Jews but as I got older Asians too) moved to. If one goes back far enough, Scarsdale was like Bronxville as well but long ago they accepted newcomers of wealth and demographic change. Another place similar in this regard (but much smaller and a tiny bit less rich than Scarsdale) is Ardsley, it too was once an "old money", WASPy kind of town, but eventually saw a significant Jewish and Asian population. Pelham also was once an lace where well-to-do African Americans have started to go (Pelham is the only village in Westchester other than the more middle class and urban-ish Ossining to be over 10% black, though barely.... I had a Jewish friend who grew up in Pelham in the 1970s and he was very uncomfortable there). I had heard that Bronxville was the "last bastion" of this in Westchester and hasn't changed, but maybe that is incorrect. I do not know of any Jews who live in Bronxville (I used to do a lot of lower Westchester SAT/ACT tutoring and had a lot of Jewish and Asian clients from Scarsdale and Ardsley, but never from Bronxville, they were always (based on last name) WASPs), but if the post that the school district is 7% Asian is true, then yes it is finally entering the 21st century too. Good to hear! 04-04-2021, 01:57 PM 99 posts, read 84,955 times Reputation: 141 Come over to Ossining! Reputation: 214 It always surprises me when someone wants "affluent" and great schools yet wants diversity. Based on my experience it doesn't exist in America. Mamaroneck school district is great! But many people who want "great" schools avoid it. Why? If you want the diversity it's as good as it gets! Even their elementary school that's rated 4 (or close as well, but again may have some naysayers. Is Mamaroneck really the best example in Westchester County? that mix Irish, Italian and Jewish ethnicities are no longer considered diverse. I have never actually sought out ethnic diversity (lower middle class to wealthy range) but my central requirement was low crime, a nice look and feel to the neighborhood/town and good schools. All those considerations came before ethnic diversity and will continue to for me. 04-06-2021, 07:28 AM 140 posts, read 231,553 times Reputation: 220 Once you get above the level of seriously underperforming school districts, 'school rating' is mostly just a measure of affluence. I was a bit hesitant when we came down here, but my ex wife and I were going though a divorce and she was adamant about this place. She is Taiwanese and really liked the school district. She had friends here as well and knew a bit more than I did. She was right and we both moved to here and I can say it's been a good experience. As for diversity, well you will find some, but like another posted wrote, it's an affluent town and the real-estate is guite high here. The town is only 1 square mile so it doesn't have as much area to covers like other towns in Westchester. My daughter is mixed (like yours) and she has no issues here. She has lots of friends (mostly white) but she is alway good friends with hispanic and asian kids. There is not much of a presence for black family in the school district, however with Sarah Lawrence college and the surrounding towns Bronxville draws in a diverse crowd, which I was very happy to see. So it's not like people are comfortable with. As for the School, it is very good and they have an advanced curriculum. The school is one large building housing Kindergarten to 12th grade. My daughter is in 5th and is doing well. It seems we have swapped out day care of tutors as it is needed, our daughter seems to like the extra help. So far all of her teachers have been amazing and become friends along the way. The teachers have been amazing and become friends along the way. you end up in Westchester Middle school is going to suck. It is what it is and I don't think any town can make a difference as it is always up to us parents to be cognitive of it. I would check it out and I would be happy to give you my agents info. Her name is Tatiana Castro-Taboas [email]tatiana.castrotaboas@compass.com[/email], M: 917-613-9810 She's Hispanic, She's from queens, She speaks three languages and her kids are in the school district. She is very cool to boot.   I wonder how it has been possible for Bronxville to keep such restrictive zoning laws. Even though it is a very desirable time with a great commute, just a couple of high rises in New Rochelle and Yonkers can have as many people as the whole 1 sq mile Bronxville. Why don't we see any pressure or desire on the part of developers to build at least 6-7 story condos in Bronxville? 12-14-2023, 08:17 PM 5,001 posts, read 8,409,086 times Reputation: 4575 Nothing makes me happier than "lack of diversity" the way people view that word. diversity. The question is the lack of much of new construction, including the 5-6 floor condos. Considering the expected prices for any condo project in Bronxville, I would not expect much more diversity anyway (although, who knows, perhaps rich Asians?), but at least more people would live to Bronxville than the current 6,500. 12-14-2023, 08:36

the whole 1 sq mile Bronxville. Why don't we see any pressure or desire on the part of developers to build at least 6-7 story condos in Bronxville? I'm somewhat acquainted with Bronxville after spending a good amount of time there, though admittedly that was many years ago. Of all the towns in lower Westchester County, it's the one I like the best (ironically, the one I hate the most in Westchester is Mount Vernon right next door, lol.) The thing about Bronxville is its small geographic size. There are regions of municipalities nearby, not just in New York but in New Jersey and Connecticut too, where literally Bronxville is the equivalence of a very small part of the entire territory. Take Stamford, CT as an example. It's a few minutes drive away. Bronxville would fit in the North Stamford section and most of the area is completely different from the area is completely different from the area of Stamford section and most of the area remains outside of that. That entire area is completely different from the area remains outside of that.
might as well be in a different town in each part due to how big is the difference. One is very city-ish with many highrises and trees are evidently less, but in North Stamford nothing is allowed higher than the trees and they dominate the scene to the point you can see the forest even in the most built up areas of North Stamford. Often the forest reaches the sides of the roads. Hardly any commercial development. For the most part homes are in sizable lots, hardly any sidewalks, etc. Even the weather can be different. It isn't uncommon for precipitation events that cover the entire municipality for snow to fall in North Stamford while in South Stamford is all rain. You will sometimes see care arriving in downtowm from North Stamford on I-95 vs on the Merritt Parkway are very different experiences not just because the Merritt is more scenic, but along I-95 it becomes obvious you are passing by an urban center while on the Merritt if it wasn't for the signs you would never know. In fact, someone not familiar with Stamford would think they are passing through an unimportant low density populated place, yet Stamford is one of CT's most populated places and ranks high in importance. You ask how can Bronxville keep its zoning limiting development and height? Well, the same way North Stamford has maintained its character very different from South Stamford, despite it's all one city (a city in name only when it comes to North Stamford alone is bigger than Bronxville (over 600 Bronxvilles can be placed in North Stamford and there is still land available to complete the size of that section) and, in fact, less dense than Bronxville given homes tend to sit in bigger lots and there are hardly (I want to say none, but who knows if a few are tucked in the woods not seen from the roads) any large condo developments. In that sense, Bronxville has more. In fact, North Stamford feels more rural (though covered in forests) than anywhere in Bronxville. It even has stables/a horse farm, something I think doesn't exist in Bronxville is that while it doesn't have a large diversity in the social class, it isn't more diverse than Bronxville. While I think most people living in North Stamford are white, it's common to see a black family, a Hispanic or an Asian (either from East Asia such as Korea or from other parts of Asia such as India) living in homes here and there. All middle class and up. I don't see it hard at all for Bronxville to be able to keep its own thing.

The other day I walked through the Metropolitan Museum of Art which is a huge museum in New York. They basically honor every culture around the world, every culture goes on display. Don't hate me for this but, my favorite part of the Met is The American Wing. It is a comprehensive display of American design of furniture, architecture and lifestyle. This wing is absolutely superior to the rest of the museum. It shows old school historical interiors that show what life looked like for affluent families in New York and Connecticut from hundreds of years ago. It's easily the most superb craftsmanship. It is our own culture. Of course we get people who say "Americans have no culture" but honestly that is 100% false. We actually have the best of the best. We HAVE contributed more than the rest. And if Team Diversity don't like it......why don't you all leave? Seriously 04-05-2024, 04:02 PM 130 posts, read 190,008 times Reputation.

 "sundown town" until the late 60s. Even in the 70s the selling and buying of houses was done under the old "gentlemen agreement" system whereby anyone selling a house had to get signatures from a certain amount of neighbors first (I kid you not). The entire central corridor from Bronxville to Mt. Kisco was run this way. I used to work with a Dominican man who grew up in Yonkers and he once told me that if he and his friends hung around Bronxville past a certain hour the local cops would get extremely hostile and inquisitive, even though they weren't doing anything wrong. Going as far as accompanying them to the end of town. So, it shouldn't come as a surprise that professional well

Have you seen the attendants actually checking resident permits at any WC park? I'm sure every now and then they will, but it's not the norm. Every week the NYT has one or two of these pieces on one of the

and I both grew up there as did our parents and grandparents. It was once a middle class town where everybody and everybody's business. It was like one great big giant family. Fortunately for Irvington there were no big box stores or groceries. Irvington's just a bunch of small shops on Main Street where the owners knew just about everyone who lived there. You could walk into a store just to shoot the breeze without even buying anything. There were a number of estates Rutter's, Halsey's, Stern's etc. Some had mansions that resembled castles on the Rhine. Stan Getz had a mansion off Broadway which is now Highgate. Phelps Labs and then the Yeshiva was at the corner of Broadway and Harriman Road. All around the reservoir was all woods. Same for East Clinton Ave. all the way up to Halsey's pond. We used to ride dirt bikes throughout some of those properties. All are now gone, the large tracts of land sold off and multi million dollar homes went up. Homes on the streets from Astor Street on up were all owned by blue collar workers and their families. Today they are selling for $800,000 and up with very little property and on the street parking. Both Ardsley Park and Matthiessen Park were about the only exclusive places in Irvington. There were only a very few poor families if you want to call them that living in Irvington only one building that we would consider run down. We all called it "the barn" located on North Dutcher Street next to the bank. A lot of the village residents were employed by Lord and Burnham's which had a factory next to the railroad station and their main office was across the street on Astor Street which is now a state park. As kids we used to go down there when the huge lumber ships came in to unload. If you've ever seen the movie "North by Northwest" the train goes right by the old J.C. Turner lumberyard. The lumber yard also employees owned their own homes. These were jobs that required only a high school education. And yet you could afford a home in Irvington! We had a home and my father only had a high school education and my mother didn't work. Same for my wife's family along with my cousins who were also Irvington residents and knew all of us by name. Because of that we got away with a lot of stuff like underage drinking and at times a few bar fights at the Broadway Grill and at The Alibi on the corner of North Buckhout and Main. Whenever we got into trouble the cops would drive us home and we'd receive a good sound thrashing from our parents. The Broadway Grill had a pool table which was the source of many of the problems. Drunk's don't like to lose especially when there's money on the table. I remember when a big fight broke out at the Main Street Gym after a High School dance when a bunch of out of towner's from Dobbs and Tarrytown started some trouble. It followed into the Pizza Shop which is now an electronics store. It was almost like a small riot which was too much for the local cops and they had to call in Dobbs Ferry and Tarrytown police. At the time Irvington only had three cops on duty, a desk sergeant, a foot patrol on Main Street and one in a patrol car. About the only thing they did was chase us kids around from place from our favorite drinking spots usually behind the Main Street school, down at the docks or on the aqueduct. There wasn't really any street crime to speak of, no muggings or assaults, only one murder that I can remember. When ever there was a fight it was caused by drinking and among willing participants. Indeed Matthiessen Park what we called "down the beach" was closed to out of town residents during the summer months. There used to be a retired cop John Ruddick that would check for id's at the entrance. They used to have movie night "down the beach" every Wednesday night during the summer. One time one of the cops left the police car running at the entrance to the park while he walked down to where the movie was being shown. One of my friends hopped into the car and drove it into the Hudson River at the old boat ramp with the lights on and the siren going. That was the local hero. Man, we had a ball back then. Irvington was a great place to grow up in. With all of the wealthy people that have taken over I wonder what it's like now? Most of our old friends have left just as we did as we could no longer afford to live there. I would imagine that if we ever came back to visit we'd be complete strangers in what was once our old home town? 133,341,858 times Reputation: 18827 Irvington Theater to end nearly 5-year pandemic pause, reopen with fresh look, lights, AC: Street view: 3D%3D "That was one extremely long intermission. When the Clocktower Players' "The Color Purple" opens Nov. 2, it will have been 4 years, 7 months, and 12 days since the Irvington Theater last held an audience. The opening night of "Matilda" was canceled on March 21, 2020, in those first unsettling weeks of the pandemic. They thought it might be closed a week or two. Then they were told the show would not go on. It has been 55 months and 12 days. Air-quality and air-flow restrictions meant the circa 1902 theater on the third floor of Irvington's Town Hall needed modern air-conditioning, something it hadn't ever had. Throw in supply chain issues and $2 million and here we are: 1,687 calendar days from one (canceled) opening night to another, when the show will go on. Other downtown theaters have reopened across the Lower Hudson Valley: Peekskill's Paramount, The Capitol in Port Chester, Tarrytown Music Hall just up the river. In Brewster, they've revived the Southeast Town Hall Theater. Now, it's Irvington's turn, and theater manager Greg Allen can't wait to welcome the crowds back. He's prepared to hear surprise in their voices. "People are going to walk in and see new paint and carpeting and go, 'This is why it was closed?" he said with a laugh. "But it's all that work behind those walls and the amazing work they've done to create walls that look like it was always that way." Behind the walls is where the bulk of the budget went, to duct work and insulation and wires and electronics, to make the 1902 building 2024 comfortable. Allen says nearly five years of painstaking work has struck just the right balance. "It was important to me to honor the history of this building while making sure it is giving patrons and those renting the space and arts partners all the technology and other conveniences of the future," Allen said. "It was a true battle between those two. People may think, 'Gosh, this took so long,' but I love the care that was taken." Breaking in the new Irvington Theater, with musicals and comedy The venue will come roaring back this autumn, starting with an open house and three big events in rapid succession: - Irvington Theater Open House! (Oct. 26, 2 to 4 p.m.) A chance to tour the restored gem of a theater, to see the new paint and carpet, lobby and dressing rooms, and feel the air-conditioning. Free. - "The Color Purple." (Nov. 2 at 7:30 p.m., Nov. 3 at 2 p.m.) Clocktower Players, one of the Broadway musical about a woman who endures abuse and neglect on a journey to find home and family. $45. - "Laugh Out Loud." (Nov. 9 at 7:30 p.m., Nov. 3 at 2 p.m.) 7:30 p.m.) Billed as "a night of comedy to celebrate Irvington Theater's grand reopening," this evening of adult entertainment features Lenny Marcus ("The Doily Show"), Ophira Eisenberg (NPR's "Ask Me Another"), Mike Feeney ("The Tonight Show with Jimmy Fallon"), and Erin Jackson ("CONAN"). $35, $50. - "Les Miserables: School Edition." (Nov.
22, 23 at 7 p.m., Nov. 24 at 3 p.m.) Broadway Training Center, another arts partner, presents the epic Broadway musical of love, loyalty, redemption and revolution, based on the Victor Hugo novel. $23, $19. Links to tickets at www.irvingtontheater.com. There is more to come. Allen said the changing demographic of the river towns — think young NYC transplants — leads him to believe that a comedy series will draw crowds. He'll also continue "As IFF," the All Shorts Irvington Film Festival, in the spring and a winter "Short Play Fest" that started virtually during the hashtag #IrvingtonAnywhere. "All through this time that our doors have been closed, we still produced 38 events: Outside movies behind Main Street, play readings in the library, a lot of online stuff. We got a lot of use out of sandwich boards to get out the word. We'll likely keep doing that, with a sandwich board on Main Street saying: 'Show tonight.' "It will be wonderful to have that heart beating again inside our building," he said. "I can't wait until there are people here and we're making art on this stage again." Where the money went It has been a long time coming, as crews pored over every inch of the space, looking for places to tuck mechanicals and storage, to engineer flooring and retrofit a building that opened in 1902, more than a decade before the last pandemic (the one in 1918). The HVAC and air-conditioning upgrades will reap windfalls, making it possible to have programs 12 months a year, something unthinkable in the stifling summer months of the past. "Our season was getting shorter," Allen said. "We weren't just closed June, July and August. May was atrocious and people were renting the space and it was so hot in that balcony. September getting more and more warm. We were not cooling down till October. So our ability to rent out and produce art was in jeopardy because of the lack of air." Storage areas were created. And there was money spent on a new paint scheme and custom carpets. State-of-the art sound and lighting — including a bar from which to hang stage lights over the orchestra — will change the experience for patrons and those renting the space, another key for Allen. "Are we a museum or are we a working theater?" he asked rhetorically. "We want to make sure that we can give our renters the things they need. A good lighting designer will come to our space and say, 'I've got to be able to give them that front of house lighting." For the pandemic years, the theater was a sea of plastic and scaffolding. From the outside, the historic building's oversized windows appear the same, but they've been retrofitted on the inside to allow for ductwork and wires and all sorts of non-sexy infrastructure stuff that took up most of the budget. Village administrator Larry Schopfer said the project's $2-million cost was covered by $500,000 from a state and municipal grant sponsored by Senate Majority Leader Andrea Stewart-Cousins, $150,000 from a similar grant sponsored by former Assemblyman Tom Abinanti (and now through Assembly member MaryJane Shimsky). The remainder was funded by the village's capital budget, Schopfer said. A nomadic partner In the meantime, Clocktower Players has lived a nomadic life. It not only lost its performance and rehearsal space in Irvington; its founding artistic director Cagle McDonald retired. George Croom and Rene O'Neal now share artistic-director duties and are preparing the semi-staged concert production of "The Color Purple," rehearsing in a dance studio in a mall in Stamford, Connecticut. Said O'Neal: "We've performed at Tarrytown Music Hall, at the JCC in

Scarsdale. We rehearsed in Hastings and performed at the Manor Club in Pelham and at Westchester Community College. And without the theater to rehearse in, because that space is no longer available for our rehearsals, we'll rehearse at the American Legion in Hastings." Croom said the show seems a perfect fit for the moment. "The show is about family, it's about home, but it's more about creating your family. It's about perseverance, overcoming obstacles and still finding your strength," he said. "There's a wonderful song at the end of the show called 'I'm Here,' and that's it. We're here after four years of being nomadic and dealing with all these issues. We're here, we're going to keep going.
That's the message of the show to me. It's about finding your strength and moving forward." Ready to fill Irvington's restaurants Back on Main Street, Greg Allen is ready to crank up the economic engine that the Irvington Theater represents. There have been no studies to demonstrate the financial impact the little theater has on the village's economy, but Allen is convinced things will pick up along Main Street when shows return to the stage. "People do not just go to the theater. They buy. They spend money. I can't wait for that to happen again, that we can bring that many people back in. They're going to start going back to the restaurants and eating and making sure we have all those eateries up because they've changed through the years. We've lost some during the pandemic. That was definitely a loss." Allen is also a village employee, and the theater is a village department is giving back to the village now, after all this time, that we can start bringing in revenue again," he said." 10-31-2024, 05:42 PM Location: Connecticut 11,629 posts, read 17,127,195 times Reputation: 11878 Irvington compared to Manhattan? What?! This past summer I went there after spending some time in Tarrytown (the nicest downtown in that part of Westchester County) and Sleepy Hollow. While Irvington was nice, I thought Tarrytown was nicer. It also seem to be a ghost town in its downtown while Tarrytown was alive with many pedestrians and interesting shops/restaurants. This is why I don't see the Manhattan connection they say in the article. Sure, many that live in the town probably are from NYC or work in NYC but live in Irvington. Beyond that, I don't see any similarities within the 2. There is more similarity between Manhattan and Tarrytown/Sleepy Hollow on the basis of the street life/amount of pedestrians in their downtowns.
